

Broadband PIN Diode Attenuator Bias Network

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Diode network configurations are disclosed in which cathode bias voltage is held substantially constant to provide an attenuator circuit in which return loss is optimized throughout a broad dynamic attenuation range. Preferred embodiments include PIN diodes arranged in a π network having two attenuation control signals provided thereto. Alternative embodiments include PIN diodes arranged in a T network having two attenuation control signals provided thereto.